

MRS. SUTTON READY TO CONTINUE FIGHT

Mother Says Autopsy Strengthens Case—Will Appeal to Congress.

MAY CARRY CASE TO CIVIL COURTS

Dr. Vaughan Finds Clean Cut Bullet Wound, Considered Valuable Evidence.

Confident that on the whole, the autopsy on the body of her son, Lieut. James N. Sutton, whose death at the Naval Academy has been the cause of two naval investigations, has strengthened her case, Mrs. James N. Sutton is preparing today to continue the fight to prove through the courts of Congress that her son did not die a suicide.

Lieutenant Sutton's body now lies in consecrated ground in Arlington Cemetery, following its exhumation yesterday afternoon. This fact, and one other especially, Mrs. Sutton said today, she points to as belated victories. The other development of a day of dramatic incidents is the disclosure through the autopsy that the bullet wound in Sutton's scalp is clean cut and in his formal report, it is understood, that Dr. George Tully Vaughan, chief surgeon for the mother in yesterday's proceedings, will advance the expert opinion that a clean-cut wound could not have been inflicted by a revolver held at a distance of three or four inches in Sutton's own hand.

The large bruise found upon the forehead, to the mind of Mrs. Sutton and her attorneys, also substantiates their theory that Sutton was unmercifully beaten in the fight with his fellow-officers.

Forming Future Plans.

Attorney Henry E. Davis, chief counsel for the Sutton interests, was not prepared today to announce his already formulated plans for the carrying on of the case.

An appeal to the Maryland civil courts and to Congress is within the range of the near probabilities.

Despite the fact that it was determined by the autopsy that Lieutenant Sutton's arm was not broken, as some one had suggested to Mrs. Sutton in an anonymous letter, the attorneys for the mother, while apparently in a feverish proposition at first, are today glad that it was held. The revelation as to the character of the bullet wound, they hold, is a most important one.

Dr. Vaughan made a preliminary statement regarding the autopsy. Surgeon Raymond Spear, representing the Navy Department, would make no comment pending the filing of his formal opinion with the Navy Department.

Dr. Vaughan's Findings.

In his comments Dr. Vaughan said of finding no ribs or bones broken, but said that a large contusion had been found on the right eye and a smaller one on the left side of the chin. The scalp bullet wound, he declared, was apparent to all who witnessed the autopsy, was perfectly clean cut, and the hair showed no signs of powder marks.

"We are glad now that the autopsy has been held," said Attorney H. W. Vandye, Davis' assistant in this case, who, with his brother, E. W. Van Dyke, stayed throughout the trying experience in the autopsy room.

"The disclosure as to the nature of the bullet wound will make a most valuable bit of evidence, as will those regarding the severe bruises, still apparent on the forehead."

The fact that the arm was not found broken is of importance, Mrs. Sutton said, as we had no direct evidence that such a condition existed. It was a suggestion contained in a letter to Mrs. Sutton that caused her to want to ease her mind on that score.

Performing of Autopsy.

Dr. Raymond Spear, Dr. George Tully Vaughan and his assistant, Dr. H. E. Gayner, performed the autopsy. The only other witnesses of the autopsy were H. D. Rhodes, inspector of national cemeteries, who was delegated by the War Department to assume charge of the arrangements at Arlington yesterday afternoon, and the Messrs. Van Dyke. The mother and the dead officer, several personal friends, Attorney Henry E. Davis, and representatives of the press made a cursory examination through the glass panels of Sutton's features before the casket was opened. Father Olds, who afterward gave the body consecrated burial, and not with the autopsy room, but remained at the grave throughout.

A detail of soldiers kept away the curious, and the gates of the cemetery were closed during the day under orders from the department.

"I am exceedingly grateful for the courtesies shown by the War Department," said Mrs. Sutton this morning. "Everything was done to make the experience as little trying as possible, and the officials connected with the exhumation had perfected every necessary detail."

Major M. G. Zallinski, Major Macgown, superintendent of the cemetery, and Mr. Rhodes were the officials who actively supervised the arrangements.

A trying afternoon for the mother and for some of the friends who followed was brought to a close when the first clod of earth fell upon the new casket in which the body of Lieutenant Sutton had been placed following the autopsy. Then, for the second time, the corpse of Mrs. Sutton gave way to motherly grief and although she has just seen the fulfillment of her desire of two years—consecrated burial for her son—she left the scene in tears.

On the whole, she bore the somewhat tragic, and admittedly dramatic, events of the afternoon with remarkable fortitude. There were those who feared a breakdown when Mrs. Sutton looked upon the face of her son, the state of preservation of whose body was then unknown. Restoratives were suggested in event the shock should prove too great.

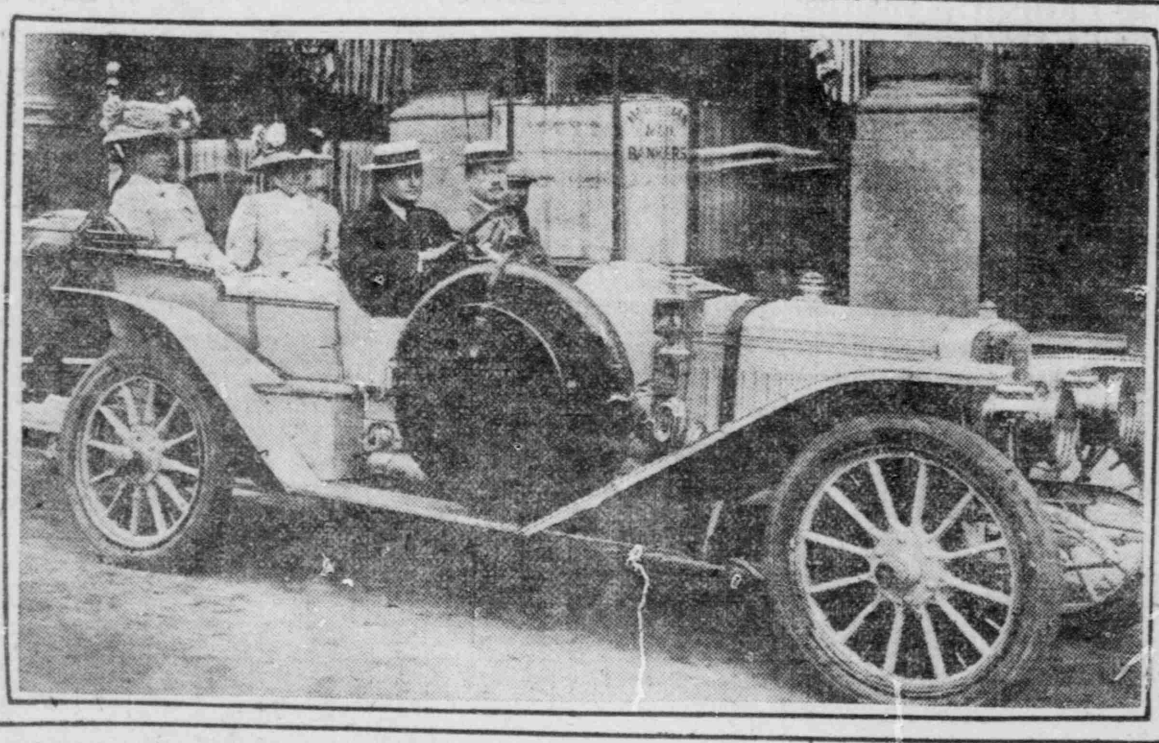

"I can stand it," replied the mother, the firm lines of her mouth denoting determination. "I have to stand it. I want to see for myself."

Body Is Raised.

It required but a few moments to disinter the body. The mother, together with her two women friends, sat in a nearby carriage while the well-preserved cedar box containing the casket was raised and carried to a waiting ambulance. Then the journey back to the improvised autopsy room, in the rear of the old Lee mansion, was begun, the little funeral cortege moving slowly over the cinder paths of Arlington Cemetery. Just as a similar one had done twenty-three months ago, when Sutton, branded then a suicide, had been buried with no thought of those present that the body would ever be raised to earth again.

A silent, solemn little group of attorneys, principals and newspaper men stood without the little room while the cedar case was opened. Within lay a black coffin, draped in the flag under whose case Sutton was enlisted when he met his death at the Naval Academy. The Stars and Stripes were almost intact but the silken fibre had become a little faded and mottled. The occupants were in wiping the moisture from the glass covering above the dead marine's face.

At this juncture there was a becomming movements by Dr. Vaughan and Mrs. Sutton, nervously herself for one of the bitterest moments of her life, left the carriage and walked slowly into the autopsy room. The few gathered there fell back and for a brief moment the mother was with her dead. She had never seen "Jimmie's" face in death before, for she could not come East to the funeral.

Regains Control.

She wept just a bit and then, as if remembering that this was an autopsy of possible vindication and not one of grief, she regained her wonderful self control, bent low over the glass panel and began to minutely observe the features of her son. By this time Mrs. Gillen and Mrs. Boneham had drawn near, the proceedings unnering them perhaps more noticeably than the mother. Her initial examination concluded, Mrs. Sutton, with a confident air, called her surgeon, Dr. Vaughan, to the side of the casket. She pointed to the forehead and the head of the corpse, and upon Lieutenant Sutton's forehead and to another underneath the left cheek. She had always contended that her son's face and body were bruised more than the participants in the midnight campus fight would admit.

The bruise above the right eye was of a dark, purplish color and even at this late date was as plain as though it had been upon the head of a living man. In size it was about three by two inches. The bruise under the chin was somewhat smaller.

"I want members of the press present to notice particularly the large bruise on the forehead," said the mother when she at last emerged. "It means that he received a terrific blow there."

Returns to Grave.

After she returned to her carriage, Mrs. Sutton's attorneys advised that she return to the grave, more than a mile away, and await there the completion of the autopsy. The coffin was then opened, everyone being excluded from the room except the surgeons, and the real investigation of the nature of Sutton's wounds began.

After it was found that the bullet wound through the scalp was clean-cut, Mrs. Sutton's attorney, Mr. Vaughan, then opened, everyone being excluded from the room except the surgeons, and the real investigation of the nature of Sutton's wounds began.

one of the attendant group in doubt of what the moment meant to her.

It was one of the most unusual scenes ever witnessed in Arlington Cemetery, this sundown gathering about an open and newly consecrated grave.

As the earth thudded, still the watchers, one by one, moved away. The mother and a few of her closer friends remained, for there were numerous floral offerings that were to be placed upon the new hallowed resting place of Lieut. James N. Sutton.

"I'll stay here until it is over with. I want to see the flowers placed," said the mother, as the majority of the small band of interested sympathizers moved away.

WILL KEEP CHILDREN IGNORANT OF SUICIDE

Joseph Burns Will Not Allow Boys to Know of Mother's Act.

Still ignorant of the tragic death of their mother, the two little sons of Joseph Burns, Jr., are playing around the home of their grandparents at 711 Eleventh street northeast today, doing much to drive away the gloom that has gathered there.

Friends and neighbors gathered at the house today to console the stricken husband and care for the children, and they exerted their best efforts to keep the little boys busy at play, that they might not miss their mother. But sometimes, in the midst of their play, the childish faces sober up, and anxious questions are asked as to when mother is coming back.

But the little boys will never know what has become of the mother who died by the side of her children as they slept. If Mr. Burns and his parents can prevent it. They will grow up into manhood with but the shadowy remembrance of love and care of the mother who died by her own hand.

Mr. Burns received a telegram today from Charles Crawford, of Anderson, S. D., father of Mrs. Burns, asking him to hold the remains of his wife in Washington, and nothing will be done in making arrangements for the funeral until he arrives.

The body of Mrs. Burns will be laid to rest by the side of her mother in the cemetery at Tumbashung, N. Y., according to her dying request. The date of the funeral, however, will not be known until there is further word from Mr. Crawford.

PARIS STREET CARS TIED UP BY STRIKE

Few Lines Are Operating in French Capital Today as Result.

PARIS, Sept. 14.—A partial tie-up of the street car service of Paris resulted today from the strike of the street car employees on the lines in the west part of the city.

The line to Bagneux and the Champs de Mars line were without cars while only a limited number of cars ran on the other lines.

COMMITTS SUICIDE TO JOIN HIS WIFE

BOY COMMITS SUICIDE.

FREEPORT, Mich., Sept. 14.—John Washburn, fourteen years old, shot and killed himself in the woods near here today, when about to be arrested for burglarizing a grocery and hardware store. A sheriff's posse found John and his cousin, Elwin Washburn, also fourteen years old, shooting at a target with a stolen revolver. Elwin Washburn surrendered himself. John Washburn fired one shot at Deputy Sheriff Munn before turning the weapon on himself.

"FIRST STEAMBOAT" MAKES TRIAL TRIP

Replica of Fulton's Craft Again Seen on Hudson River.

NEW YORK, Sept. 14.—The veil of 100 years lifted today, and from down the waters of the Kill von Kull there steamed a wraith of the past century, a replica of "Robert Fulton's folly," the little steamer Clermont, which is to take a leading part in the Hudson-Fulton celebration the later part of his month.

America, usually the most progressive of the nations, has turned back the hands of time and navigation one century.

The Clermont steamed slowly, exactly as did her predecessor. Not more than five miles an hour could she make, for the engines in the 1807 Clermont are as nearly as possible a duplicate of the engines in the original. They take up half the boat. The boiler is upright, and there are two big and two little cogwheels. The smaller cogwheels run the balance wheels on the outside of the boiler, which are intended to prevent the paddle wheels from being stopped in the "center."

Her small, unprotected paddle wheels attracted attention. They had eight blades, compared to the hundred or more in the modern-day propellers. In the Hudson-Fulton celebration she will be manned by a crew dressed exactly as the crew of the first Clermont, and her passengers will be attired as the passengers of a century ago.

But even beyond the century in the celebration will be the replica of the first Clermont, from whose high poop deck Henry Hudson steered his courageous way up the Hudson some centuries before.

CHIPMAN TO REPEAT NEW ENGLAND TOUR

Says Route Is One of Best He Has Ever Covered.

"I am going to make the trip every year," said George B. Chipman, manager of the Washington branch of Harriman & Co., of New York, who was the host of an automobile tour over what is known as "The Ideal Tour," a thousand mile trip through New England, beginning and ending at New York city.

The time consumed on this tour, approximately 1,500 miles, was eight days and seventeen hours. The net distance in the line of accidents to the Lozier car totaled three ordinary everyday punctures—a remarkable record.

In the party were Mr. and Mrs. G. B. Chipman, Mrs. M. D. Merrill, a sister of Mrs. Chipman, R. H. Lynn, president of the American National Bank, and the chauffeur.

The Automobile Club of America set its seal of approval on the "Ideal Route," A. L. Westgard, its president, making the run in a pilot car in 1908.

Certain parts of the tour follow closely the route of the Munsey Reliability tour, notably between Springfield and Boston. Mr. Chipman declares that this stretch of road is about the best bit of running in the United States.

The big Lozier behaved splendidly on the entire journey, the last stretch of which was made with scarcely a slow down of the engine between Waterbury, Conn., and Washington.

The Chipman party left Washington at 3 o'clock on the afternoon of Friday, September 3, making Baltimore, where they spent the night. They returned to Washington yesterday.

AGED WOMAN LEAPS FROM SHIP AT SEA

Russian Passenger on Ryndam Was on Way to Join Husband.

NEW YORK, Sept. 14.—The steamer Ryndam, which arrived today from Rotterdam, was detained at quarantine for several hours, while health officers examined every person on board, 1,208 in number, owing to the reported spread of cholera in Rotterdam.

When the vessel was allowed to come through quarantine the officers reported that on September 6 Mrs. Rifke Zisel Mendelbaum, a second cabin passenger, committed suicide by jumping overboard. Mrs. Mendelbaum was fifty years old, and was coming from Lotz, Russia, to join her husband in Chicago.

STRIKE IS DECLARED BY GLASS WORKERS

Men in Plants in Pennsylvania Demand More Pay.

JEANETTE, Pa., Sept. 14.—The strike of the cutters and fitters in the American Window Glass Works is on in full force today. The men posted a strike call in the plant here yesterday, and the company officials gave notice that those who did not return to work today could consider themselves discharged. Not a man reported for work.

Reports from Monongahela and Arnold, Pa., say the action taken at the Jeanette plant has been followed there. Nine hundred men struck at Arnold.

The men have been promised an 8 per cent increase, but demand 20.

TWO SUPERVISORS GO.

ATLANTA, Ga., Sept. 14.—Because of political activity, which has been prohibited by President Taft, two census supervisors of Georgia have been removed. Joseph Hill, a Republican, will succeed Alonzo Brand, a Democrat, and J. D. Strickland, a Democrat, will succeed J. T. Ackerman, Republican.
